The short definition of Interprofessional Learning and Collaboration:

When two or more professions learn with, from and about each other in an interactive collaboration with involvement of the patient. (WHO, 2010)

Interprofessional learning and collaboration have been mentioned for more than 40 years in different international health policy documents, but recently the interest has increased.

Danish Society for Interprofessional Learning and Collaboration in Health Care was founded at the 22nd of March 2010 at Rigshospitalet.

By January 2016 the Society has more than 100 individual members and 13 organizational memberships.

Danish Society for Interprofessional Learning and Collaboration

Danish Society for Interprofessional Learning and Collaboration in Health Care was founded 22nd of March 2010 at Rigshospitalet.

The society is the first of its kind in Denmark. The aim is to gather and distribute experiences with interprofessional practice in the Health Care sector – regarding education as well as the clinical practice within the primary, secondary and tertiary sector. Another aim is to contribute to developing new ways of integrating interprofessional learning and collaboration (IPE/IPC) in Health Care.

The aim for the Society is to focus on learning and collaboration between the health care professionals in a manner that involves the patients/citizens.

The society works towards:

- Satisfied patients/citizens, users and families
- High professional standard and interactive collaboration between the different professions
- Satisfied employees in the Health Care Sector
- Enhancement of the collaboration between the Health Care Educations and the clinical practice

Background

The Danish Society for Interprofessional Learning and Collaboration in Health Care was founded in order to meet the need for interprofessional practice in the health care sector. International experiences show, that a joint effort at several levels – both political, management and leadership, educational and health care level is necessary in order to enhance interprofessional practice.

By founding a Danish Society the practice level initiatives will be exposed at a national level that will create value for the patients, citizens and health care professionals. Another aim is to increase knowledge in relation to the concepts and gather and distribute experiences from interprofessional collaboration.
